

Brinker Capital Market Barometer

JULY 2021

The US economy is on track to experience strong growth in the second half of the year as COVID-19 vaccination rates climb and restrictions are eliminated. Fiscal policy is currently supportive; however, the additional spending package expected later this year will require tax increases as an offset. The Fed has reaffirmed its commitment to support the economy; however, recent higher inflation readings have caused concern for an earlier than expected unwinding of stimulus. Our base case is that the increase in inflation is more transitory in nature, driven by base effects and temporary supply and demand mismatches, but we continue to watch closely for signs it could become structural. Intermediate and long-term Treasury yields have declined from levels seen in April. Consumer and business sentiment continue to improve, and earnings growth is expected to reflect the strength in nominal GDP. Overall, the barometer remains tilted positively in July, aligned with our overweight risk positioning across portfolios.

SHORT-TERM FACTORS (< 6 months)

	CHANGE	NEGATIVE	NEUTRAL	POSITIVE

Business cycle				●	We've entered a new expansion period with positive GDP growth since 3Q20
Demographics			●		Mixed - US and emerging markets positive but developed international negative

SUMMARY

Within the short-term factors, seasonality moved from a neutral to a negative factor. Historically, the third quarter has been relatively weaker for equity markets.

There were no changes to the intermediate-term factors, the vast majority in positive territory.

There were no changes to the long-term factors. While equity valuations are stretched, given we are in the early stage of the recovery, they are not likely a near-term driver of markets.
